Mr. President,

Caritas Internationalis and the co-signing organisations welcome the report of the Special Rapporteur.

As FBOs accompanying migrants and displaced persons around the world, we witness daily the human consequences of policies that prioritise deterrence over protection, human rights, dignity and durable solutions.

We are deeply concerned by the externalisation of borders, which weakens accountability and access to protection. These developments are increasingly reflected, among others, in a range of EU migration and asylum policies, which prioritise coercion, forced return, detention and external processing arrangements, often in countries where human rights and protection guarantees are weak, and the migrants have no connection, cultural ties or even common language. Similar concerns emerge when analysing bilateral agreements designed to deter and criminalise migration.

We are concerned that these policies and new measures will increase migrants' vulnerability and stigmatisation, normalising detention, including for children and families, and seriously limiting access to rights and effective remedies.

We are especially alarmed by proposals for so-called "return hubs" in third countries. Such arrangements risk outsourcing States' responsibilities under international human rights and refugee law and creating de facto deportation centres beyond effective human rights oversight and accountability.

Evidence from our work on the ground shows that detention causes serious harm to physical and mental well-being. It should never become the default response to migration and must never be applied to families and children.

We are also concerned that increased investigative measures may promote fear, racial profiling and exclusion, discouraging migrants from accessing essential services and support. Accepting these policies and measures extends beyond migration: it is an assault on due process and the rule of law.

As Pope Leo XIV recently reminded us, “human dignity has no passport and does not lose its value when crossing a border.” Human dignity must remain at the centre of migration governance.

We urge States to reject a “return at all costs” approach and instead promote migration policies rooted in respect for human rights, solidarity and shared responsibility.

Thank you.
